The Mother and her Son

A TOUCHING STORY. The following affecting narrative, which we find in an exchange, purports to have been given by a father to his son, as a warn. ing derived from his own bitter experience of the sin of grieving and resisting a mother's love and counsel. It is new to us worthy of frequent publication and perusal What agony was visible on my mother's face when she saw that all she said and suf- The amount of capital stock paid up fered failed to move me! She rose to go home, and I followed at a distance. She spoke no more to me till she reached her own door.

"It is school time now," said she. "Go, my son, and once more let me beseech you to think upon what I have said."

"I shan't go to school," said I. She looked astonished at my boldness, but then replied firmly : "Certainly you will, Alfred. I command

"I will not!" said I; "you can't get me up

"One of two things you must do, Alfred either go to school this moment, or I will lock you in your room and keep you there till you are ready to promise implicit obedience to my wishes in future."
"I dare you to do it," said I; "you can't get me up stairs." "Alfred, choose now," said my mother, who laid her hand upon my arm. She trembled violently, and was deadly pale.

"If you touch me I will kick you," said I, in a terrible rage. God knows I knew not what I said! Will you go, Alfred ?"

"No!" I replied, but quailed beneath her

"Then follow me," said she, as she grasp. ed my arm firmly. I raised my foot—oh, my son, hear me! I raised my foot and kicked her—my sainted mother! How my head reels, as the torment of memory rush es over me! I kicked my mother-a feeble woman—my mother! She staggered back a few steps and leaned gainst the wall. She did not look at me. I saw her heart beat against her breast. "Oh, heavenly Father!" she cried, "forgive him—he knows not what he does!" The gardener just then passed woman-my mother! She staggered back she cried, "forgive him—he knows not what he does!" The gardener just then passed the door, and seeing my mother pale and almost unable to support herself, she beck-

"Take this boy up stairs and lock him in his own room," said she, and turued from me. It was a look of agony, mingled with the intensest love-it was the last unutterable pang from a heart that was broken.

In a moment I found myself a prisoner in would fling myself from the open window, and dash my brains out, but I felt afraid to die I was not penitent. At times my heart was subdued, but my stubborn pride rose in an instant and bade me not yield.

"Nothing," I replied.

I thought I was yet dreaming, but I got up melancholy and followed my sister. On the bed, pale and cold as marble, lay my mother. She had not undressed. She had thrown herself on the bed to rest; and arising to go again to me, she was seized with a palpitation of the heart, and borne sense-

I cannot tell you my agony as I looked upon her-my remorse was tenfold more bitter from the thought that she would never know it. I believed myself to be her murderer. I fell on the bed beside her. I could not weep. My heart burned in my bosommy brain was all on fire. My sister threw her arms around me, and wept in eilence Suddenly we saw a slight motion of mother's hand—her eyes unclosed. She had recovered consciousness, but not speech. She looked at me and moved her lips. I could not understand her words. "Mother, moth-I shrieked, "say only that you forgive me." She could not say it with her lips, but her hand pressed mine. She smiled upon me, and lifted her thin, white hands. she clasped my own within them, and cast her eyes upward. She moved her lips in prayer, and thus she died. I remained still speeling beside that dear form, till my gentle sister removed me. The joy of youth had left me forever.
